Chronic fatigue is a common symptom in patients with chronic liver disease and is a major factor in determining the morbidity of these patients. Despite this, little attention has been given to the definition, diagnosis and assessment of chronic fatigue in patients with chronic liver disease. We have therefore reviewed the literature on chronic fatigue and chronic liver disease. Chronic fatigue has not been well defined and there is considerable overlap between fatigue and hepatic encephalopathy. Most chronic fatigue syndromes respond to the initial treatment of the causative factors; however, such intervention cannot be offered to patients with chronic liver disease and their symptoms are often not appropriately treated. No validated scales for the assessment of fatigue in
