Description of the Related Art Disposable products are popular for their convenience. Disposable products are particularly popular with young children. Examples of such products include baby diapers, training pants and incontinence products. Young children are often not able to properly control their bodily functions. When the children are not wearing their disposable products, they may soil the outside of the products and then put them back on. This may lead to soiling of the clothing and the floor, as the child may not change his or her clothes in a timely manner. It would be desirable to provide a container for a disposable product that allows the child to place the product in the container and dispose of the container and the product in one motion. Such a container is disclosed in U.S. patent application Ser. No. 09/053,505, filed on Apr. 3, 1998, a69d392a70
