The accounts i have always been using appear to have been created or operated by someone, like an anonymous person, but they do have addresses, so what can i do to stop them? i won't make any further transactions on the account for quite some time, and it is also unusable, but i have no way to delete it.i have read a number of answers on the internet, but none seem to be applicable to my problem. A: You may be able to identify the person or company behind the account. Otherwise you may have to proceed as follows. Delete the contents of your bank account. This can be done at your bank, or via the online banking service. If you wish to maintain the process then do not perform any transactions with the account for a period of at least a month, and ideally two months to ensure that the person who created the account or who manages the business can no longer access the account. If you do not wish to delete the account then just lock it, or it may be possible to remove the account access privileges from the account holder or from the person who manages the account on behalf of the user. You need to contact the bank where your account is held for this.

A: The contents of your bank account cannot be deleted as bank's back office knows all the credentials of your transactions. However they can be blocked temporarily. It is not recommended as there are ways to bypass the blocking. The easiest solution is to fill an online dispute form at your bank. You will have to provide the transaction and a screenshot of the confirmation page. This option is not good in case of foreign transactions. The alternative is to contact your bank and ask them to block the transaction temporarily. This is a good idea if the transactions appear to be fraudulent. You can try to block transactions by yourself. The process isn't that hard. But if you're not sure you will have to contact
