Technical Field The invention relates to a method of digitally representing a video signal using code in an arbitrary form and a video signal processing device. 2. Related Art Video encoding schemes have been used to reduce the amount of information of video data in accordance with the performance of video encoding, without substantially degrading video quality. Further, new coding schemes for higher coding efficiency have been studied in order to provide higher picture quality. For example, techniques for increasing the resolution of video data have been studied for motion picture coding. The amount of information of video data is reduced by removing redundancy in the spatial or temporal direction. Here, inter prediction predicts the temporal direction of motion of the encoder from a reference picture and intra prediction generates predictive images of a macroblock using already reconstructed pictures of a frame or the like. In intra prediction, a quadtree division method is known as a method of dividing a macroblock into blocks (e.g., see Non-Patent Document 1). Further, for example, the predictive images of a macroblock are generated by using four prediction modes including pixel values in the past block or in the blocks of the neighboring four blocks in the four directions (top, bottom, left 570a42141b
