Russian President Vladimir Putin, a known supporter of President-elect Donald Trump, had a phone call with the president-elect, the Kremlin said Wednesday. The statement said the call took place Tuesday morning, two days after Trump's November 8 election victory and hours after President Obama announced the U.S. would expel 35 Russian diplomats. It said Putin congratulated Trump and invited him to visit Russia "as soon as possible." Earlier Wednesday, Kremlin spokesman Dmitry Peskov said Putin had also spoken to Trump's chief strategist, Stephen Bannon. The Kremlin's spokesman for foreign affairs, Sergei Lavrov, said after the call that Putin had asked Trump to arrange a face-to-face meeting. The Kremlin's declaration followed one from Trump's transition team that suggested they would work with Moscow. "We hope that during this transition period, Russia will treat us the way that [former President] Obama has been so nice to them," Trump's transition spokesman, Jason Miller, told NBC News. "The president-elect has already indicated that he would like to get along well with Russia, and we hope to see that from President [Vladimir] Putin." Peskov also said that there was a possibility for the U.S. and Russia to meet on the sidelines
