We describe a high-throughput approach for the analysis of gene expression using the yeast Saccharomyces cerevisiae. Custom DNA microarrays have been used to analyze the relative levels of expression of each gene in a reference strain of yeast. A second strain expressing different reporter genes is used for further analysis of the interaction of the reporter gene with a cellular response pathway. Data are normalized to the reference strain, by comparing hybridization of the test strain to a reference strain with a similar genetic background and to a reference strain with a different genetic background. The results show that all genes are expressed differently in the two test strains, even though they have an identical genetic background. The accurate and reproducible quantification of differential gene expression indicates that the technique may be useful for quantitative analysis of gene expression.Q: Python 3.4.2 ternary operator Hello I wrote a simple piece of code in Python
