In each difficulty difficulty, the player must find and hide as many bananas as possible. In addition, the player must also find and obtain all of the hidden hats.The game difficulty is determined by the number of banana placements on each level, and not by the amount of time it takes to complete a level. The longer it takes to find the bananas, the harder the game becomes.Before the start of each level, the player must choose between three hats. Upon completing a level, the player returns to the previous level and has the option to switch the hats.Each successive level that was played increases the number of bananas on the map. When the number of bananas on the map reaches 100 bananas, the level is over, and the player must return to the previous level.The player needs to find the hidden bananas and become the very first player to find all the bananas on each level. The player loses all the collected hats when they stop playing. Reward for Complete Your first hidden bananas always are on the left side of the map. Booby Traps Booby Traps: Sometimes there is a booby trap that can limit the amount of bananas the player can collect. Booby Traps are indicated with an orange arrow. The player is required to reveal the booby trap when a banana is placed on the booby trap before collecting the banana. The player must be careful because they can accidentally trigger the booby trap and lose all the bananas collected. Collecting the banana You can only collect bananas and not the hats or booby traps. During a game, you can see how many bananas the player collects in real time. If the player is not within a 1 tile radius of the banana, that banana can not be collected and disappears when it is collected. A player can only collect bananas that are placed on map, so the player should save their bananas for later use. If a booby trap is left on the map, an auto collect feature will be triggered, if there is a nearby player. Booby Traps prevent players from collecting bananas on the map unless they are within 1 tile of the banana. The player can choose to cancel the auto-collect or to collect the bananas, even if there is a booby trap. However, if there are no bananas on the map within 1 tile of a player, and if the player has no bananas in their inventory, the player will not be able to collect any bananas. A banana placed on a booby trap will disappear when the player is within 1 tile of the

yessssssssshhhhh... Boooohh Ohh... one handed run! What a great sacrifice!Lamarcus... that was INCOMPREHENSIBLE. I had literally NO idea you could do that. Babees... your team is really really good. Our bench is our weakness. Congrats on the sweep, lads! :D:D:D:D When you're down 3 goals at home and have no roster management AND outshot in 5 of the 6 games, it becomes a straight nightmare... like...I admit I was hesitant in posting my opinion until I watched your games. You guys are doing some crabbin out there, maybe you really are frustrated. That game was the first time I ever bothered to go look at your roster. Like I said it's hard to blame you too much. The problem is your your team is fundamentally flawed. I'd like to applaud you for your coaching. It seems to me you obviously have a goal of getting to championship (by the outshot stats I took from the games, anyway) and, from this, in order to achieve that you have simply been striving to win on any terms you can. And that's an admirable strategy, but please don't turn into Team Dick whenever you're down. You went against the grain, as I think you said yourself. Now we need a Chamberlain, but only if you can become more like Kane. ... the problem is your your team is fundamentally flawed... Kane here. You say that but that is actually not what you mean at all in the ways that it would come across to a reader (whether they agreed with you or not). All that is trying to communicate to us is that we are doing a whole bunch of things fundamentally wrong, which is not at all the same thing (and no, we cannot change our game plan or our strategy, because as you said that would be against the grain). We had a great start to the season but then our luck ran out, so whilst it is not fair to blame any specific bloke (because we do not have a division in our Top 6 who hates us, as you believed - heh...), we're not exactly perfect either. Right now we are however doing the best we can with what we have, including in some positions where we are on the outside looking in. Fingers and toes crossed we can change that in the Finals. Yeah... I love reading everything that you

Training Providers Should Be Required To Discuss Mental Health Issues With Their Clients Enlarge this image toggle caption Mati Weiderpass/Getty Images/Blend Images Mati Weiderpass/Getty Images/Blend Images Within the sweeping health care overhaul President Obama was proposing in the fall of 2009, on the topic of mental health care, people with serious mental illness were not recommended for Medicaid coverage. As the House of Representatives considered new mental health coverage in the American Healthcare Act, a broad piece of health care legislation introduced by Republicans, a large black banner was displayed on the top of a Senate office building: "Let's Talk About Mental Health." Many Republicans argue the Affordable Care Act doesn't provide sufficient coverage for mental illness. But for more than a decade, the federal government has fought against attempts to require insurers to cover mental health care. For years, insurance companies allowed mental illness to be treated through an "occurrence" insurance policy — a policy that, in return for a premium, covered the cost of medical attention for a wide range of injuries and illnesses. If someone had, say, a minor stroke or broken leg, the insurer would cover that person until he or she was well again. That was it. A sudden mental illness — the kind that brings the criminal justice system to the home, for instance, or a sudden jump in blood pressure when a frantic patient is given a lethal dose of medication — was not covered. Under the health care act being proposed this week in the House, such insurance policies would be mandatory under the Affordable Care Act. The same would apply to long-term or chronic mental health problems — from schizophrenia to bipolar disorder to depression. In theory, these changes could bring results. In my own research published in early 2014, I found insurance policies that covered mental illness have positive effects, according to a national survey, reducing patients' reliance on emergency rooms for treatment. But that same study also discovered that nearly 30 percent of the insurance policies covering mental illness didn't pay as much as was hoped, because consumers faced so many surcharges
