What's new in OVERPASS™ Expert Vehicles Pack:

, The most notable and unexpected feature of Downfall is that it does not come from the realm of Half-Life - The original Half-Life is 20 years old, and whilst pushing for Half-Life 3 for over 12 years, Half-Life 2 is now 12 years old. If you believe that Half-Life 2, the often criticized game towards the end of the evolution of the Source engine, deserves a sequel, then do I have a treat for you - this third part is your opportunity to get the sequel to the game that started the Doom-ization (or Portal-ization if we go with that...) of shooters. I was with Valve three years ago when they announced Half-Life 2: Episode Two. I had heard rumors about this game - a follow-up to Half-Life 2 but not quite the sequel I expected. Had Valve announced this game on a boat out of port I would have joined them and headed back across the Atlantic. (Or so I would have liked) Sadly, no such luck. Valve announced the development of the game and the release of a teaser trailer at PAX East in April - just as they had with Blood, a FPS released a few months earlier to mop up the workstation resources on a years old AAA project. I knew that valve was going to push back majorly on their original stance - that is a multiplayer headset may not work with HL1 or HL2, that the top resolution for a play-through is a ridiculous resolution for a PC (1024x768), and that Half-Life 2 was to be episodic on the life of the company. Of course, all of these proclamations have been proven wrong before, including the resolution argument - when it was revealed that Portal 2 could run comfortably at the resolutions that Valve was touting previously. Had Valve presented Half-Life 2 to me in today's format, I would have not expected it to make a case that it is a properly earned sequel. What was once simple and clear has now become muddied with the addition of the FOV slider and the use of the Source engine - which may remind you of the use of pre-rendered cut scenes in Thief and the pre-rendered sounds of Resident Evil 4, neither of which was as bad as you make it out to be. That there was a need for such a tool that could alter the quality of a game to add to the experience of a game is something that

Emanate was created by one crazy dude named 'The-Chan' (me!) and will be releasing on all three major platforms: Steam (Windows/Mac/Linux), GooglePlay (Android) and the AppStore (iOS). The game contains no microtransactions and you will not be asked to pay in-game to unlock content. This game, although very challenging, was created with the average Joe in mind. Emanate seeks to contain all the complexity of a real-time strategy game, but without having to deliver quite so much of it at once! In fact, Emanate can be completed in about three and a half hours, including all content. It's still great to be challenging, though! This means that there are goals (bosses and collectibles, etc.) to accomplish, an epic soundtrack to listen to and an overall experience that is quite different from most other games on the market today. What makes Emanate a 'Game of the Year' candidate? Well, for one, it was created by just one guy with a lot of passion. Emanate is the first game of mine to be released commercially, and it's had a lot of hard work put into it. Here's the cherry on top - Emanate being my first game on this new engine was enough to make me fall in love with this game for good! Emanate is a game that challenges the hardcore with a game that demands skills but doesn't take those skills away. Emanate is a game about learning and playing a style of music that suits your style. That's what makes Emanate special, and why I think you'll enjoy it for a long time to come. How to Play Bring your team to the end zone with the most points. Start with the ball at the short one yard line. There are 4 'ten' yards: short, long, long half, long half. The game is a coin toss: so kick the ball out of bounds or the ball carrier will drop the ball and you'll lose. The team that starts the game with the ball on the field has the option of 'plowing' or 'running' for the next touchdown. Each team has a play counter that goes up by one when a team
