Thomas Cook will book a profit and "maintain its strong financial position", after its British holiday company confirmed it will continue to trade as it tries to stave off collapse. Britain's main travel agent looked certain to be saved from collapse after holidaymakers booked thousands of new trips to destinations including Fiji, Barbados and the Maldives. It expects to resume trading on Tuesday as planned. Thomas Cook initially announced last week it had received a £228 million loan and was in talks with its banks about more support after cancelling all its flights. But it subsequently struck a deal with the Civil Aviation Authority that also meant customers could continue to book holidays on credit. It has also secured a bridging loan from law firm Gibson, Dunn and Crutcher. Thomas Cook said on Monday the CAA guarantees had been settled and the holidaymaker payment protection insurance (PPI) scheme would remain open until Monday "as normal". "The company is continuing to trade as normal as it works to provide uninterrupted holidays to its customers," it said. "We continue to work hard to resolve ongoing issues with our lenders, suppliers and customers, but we will now have to wait until Wednesday to see how our customer holiday programme is progressing." James Bradshaw, MP for Croydon Central, told the Daily Telegraph there was "hope the company will come out of it".
