The potential of polyacrylate-based (PA) coating, to increase the functionality of microgel films as a delivery system for therapeutic bioactives, was investigated. The authors evaluated the effect of three different polymers (polyvinyl alcohol (PVA), polyvinyl pyrrolidone (PVP), and poly(ethylene glycol) (PEG)) that are widely used to fabricate mucoadhesive coating, on the swelling and release of lysozyme (Lys) from the polyacrylate coating. An in vitro swelling test showed that the swelling rate of the coating was strongly dependent on the polymer used for fabrication. Lys-loaded microgels with a high loading efficiency were fabricated by mixing PVA and PVP with the microgel of polyacrylate, and the swelling rate of the microgel decreased with increasing Lys loading. In addition, the PVA microgels were found to be more stable than the PVP microgels. The in vitro release of Lys from the microgel coating was investigated using UV-Vis spectroscopy. The release profile of Lys was dependent on the polymer used for fabrication of the coating, as expected. The PVA-PVP microgels exhibited higher drug release than the PVA microgels, which was attributed to the differences in the matrix formation between the microgels. In the case of the PEG microgels, the release profile was also dependent on the solvent nature, with an elevated release rate from aqueous conditions. The developed polyacrylate- e79caf774b
