I'm not sure why I've never taken a picture of our fridge before. It's our family favorite thing. Our quiet family favorite thing. You see, just one month ago, we were literally in the dark. I don't mean to steal from black tie dramas, but there was a blackout that lasted a few hours in our area on Saturday night. The power was out. The internet was out. My phone was out. And so were the power points, the kitchen refrigerator, and the water heater. It was a terrifying moment, as we waited to see if the power would come back on. "You know what? We'll be fine," I told my husband. I grabbed our candles and our flashlight and went to the living room, figuring we'd find candles and flashlights there. But we didn't. Our family rooms (including the kitchen) were pitch black. I can't recall ever feeling so powerless. I know you're probably thinking that we have candles and flashlights everywhere, but that's not really the case. We had to buy more candles and flashlights than usual. Honestly, for the whole month, we had to live in the dark. So since we were down a flashlight, I created a makeshift one out of a headlamp (it was the best I could do at the time). But that didn't last. Once the light of the sun came back, so did my energy and my creativity. In the days after, I wrote and I ate. We read and we worked on a craft project, and we made a lot of meals that day. But that's not all. At the end of the day, I wasn't worn out. In the days and weeks to come, I discovered that I love dark. I love being out at night. I love being able to cook by candlelight. I love sitting in the kitchen and hanging out, and popping in and out of the
