Father Stephen Bond, principal of St Nicholas' Parish in the NSW region, banned Ian Hunter from attending Sunday mass after he was spotted wearing a rainbow tie at the church's social function. In court filings seen by the ABC, he said he did not want to "promote" Mr Hunter's support of a "message which does not support and is not endorsed by St Nicholas' Parish of the Diocese of Wollongong". "For too long, we have seen divisions imposed in the Church created by those who feel the need to force their values on others," he said in the letter. "Divisions on sexuality, family life and human dignity have found expression in acts that harm the very Church, and its people, that I am privileged to serve.” He added that he did not want to “see more collateral damage to the Catholic Church, its people and its ministry”. Father Bond wrote that the parish had been “treated unfairly” by the media and the government, and the decision to expel Mr Hunter did not come “from the bottom of the heart, but is guided by the church’s commitment to stand and maintain the true teaching of Christ”. The man’s solicitor, Patrick Dwyer, said the decision “made no sense” and was against NSW law which “wouldn’t allow a ban on attendance at a religious service on the basis of someone’s views”.
