What's new:

, Alaska: Talkeetna, Alaska advertisement Surely people in Anchorage and Fairbanks have heard of the amazing Talkeetna Cave, which is about 150 kilometers north of Fairbanks. But if you are a fan of darkness, cold waters, and newly discovered animal life, I recommend you decide not to miss Talkeetna Cave. What's next if you do not explore it: You pay your wages and remain in jail for trespassing. Quite a few caves have been found in the U.S., and of these more than 60 have been found in Alaska. And despite having been out there since the mid-1800s, researchers didn't understand the origin of most of them and only a few, such as the AT-1 cave, have been studied in detail. But excavating the wreckage of the sunken railroad Komie (in very cold water) was his first task. He found evidence of huge hot springs and a number of bubbling springs. Compressed and frozen, new caves were formed. So he definitely knew the way of finding more caves in Alaska. As well as the AT-1 cave, the largest natural cave in the U.S., had been found there. It is located right on the highway and is only accessible in summer. It is the home of the gloomy, intimidating, home of the SS-Zucht (SS-dentist) fly. From this cave, Louis Petit collected more than 150 species of arachnids, about 10 types of insects (including species and subspecies), 2 species of ticks, one species of mite, one species of spider, 4 species of beetles, 3 species of flies and a number of mollusks including snow crabs. Intense exploration carried out in the cave has been found new species of beetles, spiders, crustaceans, mollusks, fish, and in total, 209 different species are known. This makes the Talkeetna cave the third most populous cave in the U.S. It is believed that these species are the leftovers from the previous interglacial, which ended 38,000 years ago. In the summer of 1931, workers at Komie found that something was supporting his base. Thanks to chance and good fortune, he could get out on the 27th of July 1931- before America was declared bankrupt. They found a big glacier in an ice free area with a very cold temperature.
