This time is not negligible when used at the execution speed of the program. In view of this, in order to shorten this time, there is provided, for example, a program which makes it possible to use already referred-to data in place of the referred-to data to be inputted when it is referred to again. The technique of the program is disclosed, for example, in the JP-A-8-323699. In the conventional program for executing the described technique, when it is referred to again, referred-to data is read out from a memory and inputted to an instruction unit, or the referred-to data is read out from a memory and referred to itself, or the referred-to data is referred to indirectly. According to the described conventional technique
