Hire the best PC gamers, developers, video editors and consultants to help you visualize your customer experience and buildAs expansion continues, federal Liberal Leader Justin Trudeau released his official climate change policy today, and has thrown his support to a new carbon pricing pilot project scheduled for this fall. Trudeau backed off his original plan to slash Canada's emissions by 30 per cent below 2005 levels by 2030, but promised to leave 2030 targets up to provinces to set, allowing for free market forces to determine the emissions reductions. In a statement, Trudeau said as a candidate he wanted to see Canada's target raised to a 45 per cent reduction below 2005 levels by 2030. "So, with today's announcement, I am now pleased to announce that there will be no change in Canada's 2030 emission reductions target," Trudeau's statement says. The announcement also contains other promises related to oil and gas production, air quality and other economic and environmental issues. It is available in full here. Liberal Leader Justin Trudeau's statement on his party's climate change policy: There are a lot of consequences to business as usual. We need leadership now. The Alberta government is proposing a cap and trade scheme that would set a price on the greenhouse gas emissions created by industrial activities, which is expected to bring in $2 billion a year in revenue to be reinvested in the environment and related industries. Justin Trudeau said it's a model that can be replicated across the country. Liberal Leader Justin Trudeau's position on a carbon pricing pilot project in Alberta. 0:50 The move, which the Liberals hope will be the first of many to follow across the country, comes shortly after the NDP in the province said it was backing the program. The program is planned to start on Nov. 1 and last for four years. "There will be a price on pollution in Alberta, and it will be revenue-neutral, so Albertans will share the benefits," then-NDP Premier Rachel Notley said in April. "All these carbon tax models have worked in place of, or as a supplement to, a carbon tax." Today, Trudeau said the Liberal e79caf774b
