Presenter: Adrian Przerwa Date: March 25, 2012 This presentation will show some of the problems arising when building a RESTful service that should also provide frequent caching, i.e. an online solution for storing already aggregated info for further queries to provide a fast and stable data access. This requires to have the client-side correctly using the HTTP caching headers when requesting resources and to have a healthy access to a sensible back-end that supports correctly setting up and maintaining the cache.
