functions for basic functions like drawing and editing. AutoCAD Feature AutoCAD has a very high level of customization and extensibility because it is an AutoLisp program, allowing the user to write their own code to control how the drawing is created. This extensibility is similar to that of 3D CAD software (e.g. CATIA). AutoCAD supports partial automation of drawing tasks through the command-line interface, named AutoLISP. The program executes any AutoLISP code that is called when the operation is performed. Although it is not as extensive as the user-written code, the language can be used to execute custom commands. The user interface does not support the full editing features of AutoCAD. The user interface is designed to work with only the limited number of objects that are supported in AutoCAD. The user interface includes a dialog box, which allows the user to customize the appearance of the program, such as its title bar, toolbar and other options. The user can customize dialog boxes by choosing from a library of predefined dialog boxes. AutoCAD includes a set of standard dialog boxes. These include a Property inspector, Plot dialog box, Sheet Properties dialog box, Standard Properties dialog box, Properties dialog box and the Drawing Settings dialog box. The Drawing Settings dialog box allows the user to customize how AutoCAD performs various functions.
