For some art is the most important part of town life. For others, it is a statement, and for others it is a tool for education. But what these artists are creating in their works, and their reasons for doing so, speak to our collective mentality in this age of desolation and uncertainty. For nearly a decade, the extended Elbaum family has been creating large-scale, public artworks throughout San Francisco. To the outside observer, they can be intimidating to look at, but they're completely accessible to all San Franciscans — artists and non-artists alike. This summer, the family opens their latest exhibition, "Common Core" at 17th on 17th gallery in Oakland. The Los Angeles-based artist Sofie Laguna installed the new images, which are based
