When I create a simple class and want to add a method - should I create a new method within the class or should I delegate the method to the superclass? For example, say I have a class called Foo which has some properties: class Foo { public String foo1; public String foo2; public void saySomething() { String something = foo1 + foo2; } } And another class called Bar which extends Foo - does Bar have to implement the saySomething method in its own class? Or can it just delegate the method to Foo like this
