On the one hand, this is a good thing. On the other hand, it's a good thing because these days there's so much fraud, we need to police it. I'm not talking about cookie-clickers, either. I'm talking about serious fraud. The Economist magazine calls it "Data Munging", and it describes it as fraud: It makes a plausible-sounding argument or takes an apparently reputable piece of research and builds on it from a false premise, missing the real story entirely. That's misleading data munging. 6d1f23a050
