Deluxe-SKIDROW.Age and participation in physical activity among children living in Rio de Janeiro, Brazil. To evaluate the age-related incidence of physical activity (PA) and participation of boys and girls from three age groups (6, 9 and 12 years old) of children living in the municipality of Rio de Janeiro, Brazil. This was a school-based cross-sectional study. It included all children from the following public and private school systems in the city of Rio de Janeiro: public elementary schools (ES) in the south zone, public high schools (EH) in the north zone and private schools (PS). Participants were 7,575 children from ES, 1,846 from EH and 2,508 from PS. PA was measured using the International Physical Activity Questionnaire (IPAQ). The occurrence of PA was greater in the 6-year-old group than in the 12- and 9-year-old groups. Among the 6-year-old group, the most common type of PA was physical exercise and the most common place for PA was inside the house. Among the 12-year-old group, the most common type of PA was the practice of moderate or vigorous physical activity, and the most common place for PA was at school. The most common type of PA among the 9-year-old group was walking/running in their neighbourhood, but the most common place for PA was at school. Boys were more active than girls. All children, especially the boys, were reluctant to participate in PA. It is important that physical education teachers encourage this participation in order to provide greater opportunities for PA for children.
