As George Lucas and other digital entertainment pioneers have been struggling to make their blockbusters shift to life in the twenty-first century, the New York Film Festival has been fighting a losing battle. Faced with a rapidly shifting cinematic landscape, time has proven that the festival's emphasis on the major studios is counterproductive when the industry is going through an upheaval. The NYFF's commitment to presenting only studio-based movies, from Sylvester Stallone and Mel Gibson to Woody Allen and Neil Gaiman, has outlived the industry it c6a93da74d
