Diversification of protein tyrosine kinase receptors in mammalian cells. Protein tyrosine kinases (PTKs) have been implicated as a major factor in the development of uncontrolled growth, angiogenesis and metastasis in cancer. But in most cases the targets of PTKs remain unidentified. Their role in many physiological processes is poorly understood. The purpose of this paper is to address this lack of knowledge and to present a detailed analysis of the kinome of the mammary epithelial MCF-10A cell line. We report the first systematic screening for the presence of PTKs in this cell line and their ligands. We provide a list of all PTKs that are expressed in MCF-10A cells. We report that each PTK is found in roughly 20-50% of MCF-10A cells. Only the presence of three specific PTKs (FGFR1, PDGFR and c-met) was confirmed on the MCF-10A cell surface. We demonstrate the specificity of ligand-receptor interactions. Finally, we report the localization and the expression level of some of the receptor tyrosine kinases.

A CHIP on the shoulder of his or her partner is a great way of strengthening relationships and being present and supportive. But this role may be more than a match for some. A study on couples and couples' partners, published in the journal Family Relations, said that while some partners tended to avoid being 'good cop' and go for the 'naughty girl', others were motivated to please and would even go overboard to achieve this. Researchers said that in terms of managing intense conflicts or getting the other person to 'grow up', both partners were important.
