How can they give such advise? To be a good writer requires practice. It does not only require knowledge of grammar and vocabulary, but it also requires lots of practice. What can students do to improve their writing? In my opinion, students should read and write extensively every day. The ability to express one’s thoughts in a clear and intelligible manner will make good writing possible. Even if they are not writing a paper or a blog, students can do their homework, or revise any previous work on a computer. By reading and writing, students will memorize every day important vocabulary, including professional terms. The two tips given below are not only good for people who love to write, but also for students who do not. 1) Writing in short sessions: Students can write in short sessions (10-15 minutes) during the day. Those are perfect for writing when they are doing anything else. This can improve their concentration and increase their chances of writing better essays. It will not be necessary to read several books in one day. 2) Grammar and vocabulary: Those who can write a few paragraphs are “good” writers. The only thing they need to improve their writing is practice. Good writers of all ages use the rule of “paraphrase”. They try to write sentences as the authors do. They can use their own words, but at the same time they use the correct words and use it in the right way. Moreover, they use their own words in every other sentence. Some words that students must learn are “everyday” and “professional” c6a93da74d
